

Why are Singapore companies “kiasu” about adopting a head-to-toe approach to risk management?

The Global Finance Crisis has made the world ever more volatile and managing “the effect of uncertainty on objectives” is fast becoming the key to sharper competitiveness and stronger sustainability for businesses in the 21st century marketplace. In fact, Singapore companies will lose out if they continue to procrastinate embracing risk management in a holistic way - such as through the adoption of ISO31000:2009. This framework provides a practical process-oriented risk management structure to help organizations of all types and sizes manage risk across the enterprise. It does not mandate a one-size-fits-all approach, but instead emphasises the fact that the management of risk must be tailored to the specific needs and structure of a particular organization.

Attend this half-day workshop by international thought-leader Jason Wilk who will expose the risks of ignoring or avoiding a total approach to managing risk. He will also reveal the benefits of maturity models in delivering business relevant governance actions and decisions.

INTERNATIONAL GUEST PRESENTER

Jason Wilk is one of Australia’s foremost risk specialists, and has been involved in developing risk frameworks for some of this nation’s most sophisticated organizations. In recent years, Jason has advised several of the world’s largest mining firms and all tiers of Australian Government in risk matters. He has experienced particular success in helping business professionals to align their language with corporate risk, ensuring greater appreciation for the value of risk management practices in the enterprise.
